Cotton Notes.

The New Orleans Picayune publishes the following from a correspondent of Madison county, Mississippi: "The re-ports of the newspapers as to the misports of the newspapers as to the mischief done by the rain in causing grass are, judging from the condition of the crops in this vicinity, rather exaggerated. Cotton is very grassy, and some will have to be thrown out, but not more, we should think, than the increase of acreage this over last year. If the weather comes off dry, we think the grass can be got under. The principal damage done has been by the rains, causing an overgrowth of the plants which are very large, long-jointed and sappy, a very bad condition for cotton be in. If the weather comes off dry, is it is almost certain to do, the plant will stop growing and shed its form. A wet beginning is, in our experience, very damaging to a plentiful bolling of the plant. It never seems to recover from it. On the whole, from present appearances, the crop will not be as good as last year's, but to what extent
